CIA Office In Fairfax Considered

Allen W. Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, conferred with Governor Stanley and State Highway Commissioner Anderson today on the prospects of locating a $54,500,000 CIA headquarters building at Langley, Fairfax County.

Dulles told reporters prior to his conference that his agency still hopes to locate its headquarters at Langley if Virginia can be persuaded to build the needed access roads to the site.

Approximately a year ago, Tenth district Rep. Joel T. Broyhill had reported that the CIA rejected a site at Langley for its headquarters structure when the state declined to underwrite a one million dollar program to expand utilities for the federal agency there.

Dulles was accompanied by a half-dozen members of his staff when he and Anderson called on the Governor shortly after noon today.

Dulles told reporters his agency already had an appropriation of more than five million dollars to plan the headquarters building and is seeking nearly 50 million dollars for the structure in next year's budget.
